CIA 101 Bush, George

EMPLOYEE BULLETIN

No. 496

29 January 1976

SWEARING IN CEREMONY

1. The oath of office will be administered to Mr. George Bush in the Headquarters Auditorium on Friday, 30 January 1976 at 11:00 a.m. The President of the United States, Mr. Gerald R. Ford, will participate in the ceremony along with Cabinet Officers, Members of Congress, other guests as well as representatives of the media. A limited number of invitations will be extended to Agency employees and for those employees who cannot be accommodated in the auditorium, arrangements are being made to broadcast the ceremony live into the lobby/first floor area of the Headquarters Building.

2. Immediately following the ceremony President Ford plans to adjourn to the Headquarters Building where he has expressed a desire to meet with the employees. During this session the working press will be excluded.

SUBJECT: Bush Swearing-In

STATINTL

The President will attend the swearing-in of George Bush as Director of CIA on Friday, January 30, at the Central Intelligence Agency. The motorcade will depart at 10:45 a.m. from the South Grounds and the motorcade pool should assemble in the press room at 10:30.

CIA regulations restrict coverage to U.S. citizens and U.S. media representing U.S. news organizations.

Press other than travel pool wishing to cover this event must call 351-7676, the Office of the Assistant to the Director, to give their name and affiliation. There will be a list of all press who have contacted the CIA at the CIA gate and each member of the press will have to show a White House, Capitol Hill or Metropolitan Police Department press pass and have their name on the list to gain access to cover the event.

The President will arrive at the CIA at 11:00 and the swearing-in ceremony will start at that time in the CIA auditorium.

The ceremony will be piped into the White House press room. There will be no phones available at the CIA auditorium.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the President will proceed to the main building to greet CIA employees. The press will not be able to enter the main building. Writing press in the travel pool will be able to view the President with the CIA employees through the glass doors; however, all cameras and tape recorders will be restricted from this area.

Networks which will go out ahead of time to provide lights and sound should make arrangements by calling 351-7676. Any special needs which may require broadcast telephone lines should be arranged directly with the CIA today.

Space inside the CIA auditorium will be very limited.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED FOR PRESIDENTIAL SWEARING OF MR. BUSH

1. Being sworn as DCI, therefore, senior Community representation must be present.
2. Should any Congressional representation be present and, if so, who decides?
3. Is it to be a public ceremony, i.e., does the President desire or not desire press coverage? Foreign? pool? one
4. Some allocation of 500 seats in auditorium must be made inter-departmentally and decision must be made on who fills the CIA allocation.
5. Who will sit on the stage?
6. Should there be any private meeting before or after the swearing of the President and Mr. and Mrs. Bush?
7. If swearing is at 11:00 a.m., does Mr. Bush wish to invite the President to stay for lunch? form press
8. Photographic coverage -- will both the Agency and the White House provide photographic coverage? The U.S. Secret Service may have to address this issue.
9. Should CIA film and tape? yes
10. Considerable parking difficulties for VIP cars.
11. Probably should get Presidential Seal to put on rostrum in lieu of CIA Seal.
12. If there is to be television coverage, must get early determination if it to be live or only taped. If live, action has to be taken to insure capability to transmit.
13. Assume President will arrive by car -- possibility of helicopter exists.
14. Insure Presidential picture in lobby of auditorium.
15. Absolutely essential that one (1) individual be put in charge of this event.
16. At earliest opportunity get personal list of invitees from Mr. Bush.
17. Printing of program for ceremony.
18. Don't

Reproduced below are comments made during the ceremony to administer the Oath of Office to George Bush as Director of Central Intelligence:

THE CIA AUDITORIUM

SWEARING IN CEREMONY OF
GEORGE BUSH AS DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Mr. Colby:

Mr. President, I present to you an intelligence agency and community of dedicated professionals. Despite the turmoil and tumult of this past year, they have continued to produce the best intelligence in the world. I am sure they will give Mr. Bush the same loyal support that they have given me over these years.

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States.

The President:

Thank you very, very much Bill, and may I say at the outset that I fully concur with your observations and comments concerning the quality of the people. I have no question whatsoever that they will give to George Bush, as they have to me, the fullest support and the greatest dedication.

Bill, I told you and your family on Monday of my high regard for your 25 years of dedicated and distinguished service with the CIA at the time I gave you the National Security Medal. I meant every word of it. You fully deserve it, and I wish to congratulate and compliment you for this outstanding record. For good reason obviously you have the full support and deep feeling of all the people here, and those of us not in the Intelligence Community are just as grateful for the fine service you have given to your agency and to your country.

General Douglas MacArthur once said that in war there is no substitute for victory. Let me assure you that in peace there is no substitute for intelligence.

The time is long overdue for the men and women of the American Intelligence Community to receive the praise and gratitude of the nation that you have so conscientiously served. I have and I will continue to give voice publicly to that gratitude.

As every President since World War II, I depend on you as one of America's first lines of defense. Every morning as a result of your efforts, an intelligence report is delivered to my desk which is complete, concise, perceptive, and responsible. As a result, I am fully aware of the tremendous effort, the tremendous team work that goes into it and into all of the intelligence reports that I receive that are so vital to the making of sound policy decisions on national security. Let me express my personal gratitude for this fine work.

The appointment of George Bush as your new Director matches a good man with a good team. George Bush assumes the leadership of the Intelligence Community at a very critical point in its history. Critical because national and international attention is focused on your work now as never before. Because much of your work depends on secrecy and because secrecy adds an aura of mystery and intrigue, there is a natural tendency for extraordinary attention to be paid to the Intelligence Community when allegations are made that it has not functioned as it should.

Past problems, any excesses, the abuses of the past have more than adequately been described. I am concerned about them as I know you are. But one thing is very, very certain. We cannot improve this agency by destroying it.

Let me assure you also that I have no intention of seeing the Intelligence Community dismantled, its operations paralyzed, or its effectiveness undermined. The Administration fully intends to safeguard the effectiveness of this agency, the confidentiality of its information, and the lives and honor of its agents and employees.

The irresponsible release of classified information by people who should know better must cease. A better balance must be struck between the right of the people to know and this country's commitment to survive and live in peace.

Accordingly, in the next few weeks, after a great deal of study and consultation with experts in this field, I will announce my decisions on the steps I believe necessary to strengthen our foreign intelligence operations. My actions will be designed to ensure that this nation has what you and I know we must have--the best intelligence capacity in the world.

These actions will be consistent with two very fundamental principles. First, the United States must have a strong and effective capability to gather and to evaluate foreign intelligence and to conduct necessary covert operations; and second, these activities must be conducted in a constitutional and lawful manner and never be aimed at our own citizens.

George Bush shares my commitment to these principles. As a former Member of Congress and as the son of a very great man and distinguished statesman, the late Senator Prescott Bush of Connecticut, George has known all of his life that the people are sovereign and that their rights must be secure.

As a former representative of this Government to The Peoples' Republic of China and as a former United States Ambassador to the United Nations, George Bush is in step with world developments. I know from first-hand personal experience that he is a man of enormous capability, sound moral judgment, and has had an intense devotion to public service. He is fully prepared to guide the policy decisions of this agency and of the entire Intelligence Community with a depth and a breadth of knowledge that few others have.

George has said that he sees his first task as one of making a tremendous effort to restore public confidence in this fine agency. In that effort he has my full and total support.

I continue to believe that the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency must have direct personal access to the President. George will have this access on a very regular basis and whenever special circumstances require.

With his leadership and with your help, I believe we can make this agency an instrument of peace and an object of pride for all of our people. That is my goal and I know that each and every one of you share it with me.

Now it's my great privilege and pleasure to introduce Mr. Justice Stewart who will administer the oath of office.

Oath Administered

Mr. Bush:

Mr. President, Members of the President's Cabinet, distinguished Members of Congress, and other guests and fellow employees.

First, let me express my appreciation to you, Mr. President, for coming out here for this occasion. We are honored by your presence.

And I also want to thank Bill Colby for the marvelous cooperation he has given me over the past few weeks. I wish him well as he leaves this agency to which he gave so much.

Mr. President, I accept enthusiastically the challenge which you have given me. I will work hard to earn the confidence that you and the U.S. Senate have placed in me.

I will not turn my back on the past. From the past we have learned a lot about what an intelligence agency must do to maintain the confidence of the people in an open society. But the emphasis now will be on the future. And because of its dedicated people, this agency is the finest intelligence agency in the world. They will have my total support. I have much to learn and I'll work hard at that, but I pledge to my associates here my full support.

I am determined to protect those things that must be kept secret, and I am more determined to protect those unselfish and patriotic people who with total dedication serve their country, often putting their lives on the line, only to have some people bent on destroying this agency, expose their names. This must stop, and I'll do my level best to play a role in that.

I am equally determined, Mr. President, to take a new look at some of the practices that may have made great sense in the past, but that now must be reviewed and rethought to see if they are necessary and to see if they are indeed compatible with the moral judgments of our countrymen. And this won't be easy work, but as you said, sir, restoration of public confidence is essential if we are to get on about our important work here.

And lastly, Mr. President, our goal here is to provide you and others with intelligence. We are not in the policy business. We'll call them as we see them. We will be objective, and our estimates will continue to come to you without hint of bias. They will be the product of the best intelligence in the entire world.

I pledge to you that no politics, no policy bias will color the collective judgment of the CIA. This is the way you want it. This is the way the CIA operates, and this is the way our country must have it.

Many have said to me since this nomination that I am taking on a difficult and some, more pessimistic--taking on an impossible task. That may be true in one sense, but I consider myself fortunate indeed to have been confirmed for this challenging job. I want this job. I want to do it well. I like the dedication and love of country that I find here and I am proud to be a part of the CIA. Thank you very much.
